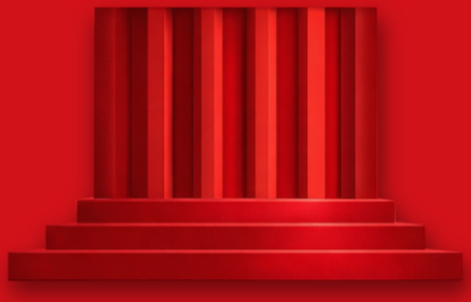
RELATIONSHIP FITNESS

"Preparing Yourself For The Love You Desire"

A Praticle Guide to Personal Discipline, Alignment, & Christ Centered Growth



THOMAS MARKS

RELATIONSHIP FITNESS

Preparing Yourself for the Love You Desire

A Practical Guide to Personal Discipline, Alignment, and Christ-Centered Growth

Thomas Marks

Copyright © 2026 Thomas Marks
All rights reserved.

Ten percent of the profits from this book are given to Hope City Church.

No part of this book may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form or by any means, including photocopying, recording, or other electronic or mechanical methods, without the prior written permission of the publisher, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and certain other noncommercial uses permitted by copyright law.

Scripture quotations are taken from the Holy Bible, New Living Translation (NLT), copyright © 1996, 2004, 2015 by Tyndale House Foundation. Used by permission of Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., Carol Stream, Illinois 60188. All rights reserved.

This book is intended for informational and inspirational purposes only. It is not a substitute for professional counseling, medical advice, financial advice, or legal guidance. The author makes no guarantees regarding specific outcomes. Individual results may vary.

All names, examples, and scenarios are used either fictitiously or for illustrative purposes only. Any resemblance to actual persons or events is coincidental.

DEDICATION

This book is dedicated to those who desire a healthy, lasting relationship but feel stuck in patterns they do not fully understand.

To the men and women who have loved deeply, tried again, and wondered why the same outcomes keep repeating.

To those who pray for a healthy relationship and sense that something needs to change within before it can change around them.

May this book bring clarity, wisdom, and strength as you prepare for the love you desire.

Philippians 4:13 (NLT)
“For I can do everything through Christ, who gives me strength.”

Psalm 127:1 (NLT)
“Unless the Lord builds a house, the work of the builders is wasted. Unless the Lord protects a city, guarding it with sentries will do no good.”

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction
Preparing Yourself for the Love You Desire

Chapter 1
Putting Relationship Fitness into Practice
Preparing Your Heart and Habits to Live the Six Pillars

Chapter 2
The Real Reason Relationships Fail

Chapter 3
Becoming the Partner You Want to Attract

PILLAR ONE: SPIRITUAL FITNESS

Chapter 4
Your Relationship with God Determines Everything

Chapter 5
Purpose, Calling, and Kingdom Partnership

PILLAR TWO: FINANCIAL FITNESS

Chapter 6
Money Reveals Character

Chapter 7
Building a Financial Future Together

PILLAR THREE: PHYSICAL FITNESS

Chapter 8
Your Body Is Part of Your Relationship

Chapter 9
Building Healthy Routines as a Team

PILLAR FOUR: MENTAL FITNESS

Chapter 10
Emotional Intelligence and Self-Awareness

Chapter 11
Healing, Growth, and Personal Responsibility

PILLAR FIVE: APPEARANCE FITNESS

Chapter 12
How You Present Yourself Matters

Chapter 13
Living a Lifestyle of Presentation

PILLAR SIX: INTIMACY FITNESS

Chapter 14
Understanding Intimacy Before Marriage

Chapter 15
Building Healthy Sexual Expectations for Marriage

Chapter 16
Living the Pillars

Chapter 17
Creating Your Personal Growth Pillars

Chapter 18
Choosing Who Walks Beside You

Conclusion
Becoming Ready for the Love You Want

About the Author

INTRODUCTION

Preparing Yourself for the Love You Desire

Psalm 127:1 (NLT)
"Unless the Lord builds a house, the work of the builders is wasted. Unless the Lord protects a city, guarding it with sentries will do no good."

Wisdom: God will not protect what you refuse to prepare for.

Most people pray for marriage without preparing for it. They ask God for a healthy relationship but ignore the habits, wounds, and patterns that make healthy love impossible. They want peace but live in ways that create chaos. They want honesty but avoid truth. They want commitment but resist discipline.

The truth is simple.

God can send the right person, but He will not make you ready for them.

Readiness is your responsibility.

Love does not hide who you are. It reveals it. It exposes the unhealed parts, the habits you ignore, the fears you bury, and the patterns you have repeated for years. Marriage magnifies everything. What you refuse to deal with now will eventually deal with you later.

Scripture tells us:

Proverbs 4:5 (NLT)
“Get wisdom; develop good judgment. Don’t forget my words or turn away from them.”

Wisdom is preparation.

This book is not about chasing romance, finding “the one,” or waiting for a soulmate. It is about becoming the kind of person who can build and sustain the love you desire. Healthy relationships are not discovered. They are developed through maturity, clarity, spiritual grounding, discipline, and emotional strength.

The truth most people avoid is this.

You do not rise to the level of your intentions in a relationship. You fall to the level of your preparation.

Attraction may start a relationship, but preparation is what keeps it healthy.

Attraction gets attention.
Maturity earns commitment.
Chemistry creates excitement.
Character creates stability.
Emotions create connection.
Discipline creates longevity.

Your past will follow you into your future if you do not confront it.

Old wounds resurface.

Old habits repeat.
Old patterns recycle.

Healing does not happen through another person. Marriage does not erase insecurity, immaturity, fear, or unresolved pain.

Scripture reminds us:

Psalm 147:3 (NLT)
“He heals the brokenhearted and bandages their wounds.”

Healing is a responsibility, not a reward.

This book exists to guide your preparation.

There are six pillars that determine the strength of every relationship: Spiritual Fitness, Financial Fitness, Physical Fitness, Mental Fitness, Appearance Fitness, and Intimacy Fitness.

These pillars hold up the house of a relationship. If even one is weak, the structure suffers. If several are weak, the relationship collapses under the weight of life.

Each pillar shapes how you love, communicate, choose, respond, commit, and build a future.

The goal is not perfection. It is preparation. It is progress. It is awareness. It is readiness.

When you grow, everything changes.

You attract differently.
You choose differently.

You communicate differently.
You see red flags earlier.
You set boundaries confidently.
You walk in clarity instead of confusion.

The old version of you may have chosen from loneliness.
The growing version of you will choose from alignment.

God does not bless avoidance. He blesses growth.

He honors intentionality.
He strengthens those who build with Him.

Scripture confirms this foundation:

Proverbs 24:3 (NLT)
"A house is built by wisdom and becomes strong through good sense."

This book will help you build that house.

This section is about alignment. Preparing your heart, your habits, and your life before inviting someone else into it.

You are training for the love you want.
You are strengthening the areas that will matter most.
You are becoming someone your future spouse can trust, rely on, and grow with.

Healthy love is not accidental.
It is built intentionally, consistently, spiritually.

And now, your building begins.

Formation Before Fulfillment

Most people approach growth with a quiet expectation that if they follow the right process, the promise will arrive on schedule. They assume the work is producing the outcome. But that is not how God operates, and it is not how healthy relationships are built. The process is not producing the promise. It is producing the version of you that can step into the promise. Fulfillment without formation is dangerous because it places weight on a character that cannot yet carry it. God does not withhold good things out of cruelty or delay; He withholds them out of care. Every season of preparation, refinement, and discipline is shaping your capacity for trust, intimacy, leadership, and love. This book is not about earning a relationship or forcing an outcome. It is about becoming whole, anchored, and aligned so that when fulfillment comes, you are able to steward it rather than sabotage it.

Questions to Consider

1. In what ways have I been praying for a healthy relationship without preparing for one?
2. What habits or patterns do I already know would surface in a marriage if I do not address them now?
3. Where in my life am I avoiding growth instead of pursuing it?
4. Which of the six pillars feels weakest for me right now, and why?
5. What would it look like for me to take responsibility for my readiness instead of waiting for God or another person to fix it?

Chapter 1

Putting Relationship Fitness into Practice
Preparing Your Heart and Habits to Live the Six Pillars

Wisdom: Preparation determines what your future can sustain.

Most people say they want a healthy relationship. Far fewer are willing to prepare for one.

They pray for marriage without examining their habits.
They ask God for the right person without becoming the right person.
They desire peace while tolerating patterns that create chaos.

This book begins with a truth that cannot be avoided:

God can send the right person, but He will not make you ready for them.

Readiness is not something you feel.
It is something you practice.

Relationships rarely fail because love disappears. They fail because preparation never existed. Attraction brings people together, but discipline is what keeps them together. Chemistry may spark interest, but character determines whether a relationship can last.

Marriage does not correct immaturity.
Commitment does not replace discipline.
Love does not heal what you refuse to confront.

Preparation is your responsibility.

This chapter is not about romance. It is about ownership.

Before you focus on who you want to be with, you must focus on who you are becoming. The habits you live with today will follow you into any relationship you enter. Patterns do not disappear when someone new arrives. They are exposed.

If you avoid hard conversations now, you will avoid them later.
If you lack discipline now, it will show up in partnership.
If you are emotionally reactive now, intimacy will magnify it.

Scripture reminds us of this principle:

"You do not rise to the level of your intentions. You fall to the level of your preparation."

This is why Relationship Fitness matters.

Relationship Fitness is the discipline of becoming healthy before inviting someone else into your life. It is the commitment to strengthen the areas that most directly affect how you love, communicate, choose, and build.

This book is built around six pillars that determine relational strength:

Spiritual Fitness
Financial Fitness
Physical Fitness
Mental Fitness
Appearance Fitness
Intimacy Fitness

These pillars support the structure of a relationship the same way pillars support a house. When one is weak, pressure shifts to the others. When several are neglected, the structure becomes unstable. When all are strengthened, the relationship can withstand stress, conflict, and time.

The goal is not perfection.
The goal is preparation.

Preparation means alignment between what you say you want and how you live. It means developing habits that support the future you are praying for instead of undermining it.

Many people want a healthy relationship but live in ways that make healthy love difficult.

They want honesty but avoid truth.
They want commitment but resist consistency.
They want intimacy but fear vulnerability.
They want peace but tolerate chaos.

This chapter invites you to slow down and take responsibility.

Not for your past, but for your future.
Not for what others did, but for how you respond now.

Relationship Fitness begins when you stop asking, “Why does this keep happening to me?” and start asking, “What am I allowing, avoiding, or repeating?”

Growth requires honesty.
Honesty creates clarity.
Clarity produces change.

You are not reading this book to become impressive.
You are reading it to become prepared.

As you move through the chapters ahead, you will not be asked to fix everything at once. You will be asked to become aware, to take ownership, and to practice discipline consistently.

Preparation is not dramatic.
It is daily.
It is quiet.
It is powerful.
It is consistent.

And it starts here.

Personal Reflection

For a long time, I thought if I just loved hard people would change and reciprocate. I cared deeply, tried sincerely, and wanted relationships to work. What I lacked was preparation. I had not examined my habits closely enough. I had not fully taken responsibility for the patterns I carried with me from one relationship to the next.

Growth began when I stopped focusing on who I wanted to find and started focusing on who I needed to become. That shift changed everything. Preparation replaced emotion. Discipline replaced excuses. Clarity replaced confusion.

Relationship Fitness taught me that readiness is not about timing or luck. It is about obedience, consistency, and ownership. When I began strengthening the areas of my life that truly mattered, my relationships changed because I had changed.

Questions to Consider

1. In what ways have I been asking for a healthy relationship without preparing for one?
2. What habits or patterns do I already know would surface in a long-term relationship if I do not address them now?
3. Where in my life am I avoiding responsibility while telling myself I am “waiting on God”?
4. Which of the six pillars feels weakest for me right now, and why?
5. What would change if I treated preparation as obedience instead of delay?

Chapter 2

The Real Reason Relationships Fail

Proverbs 16:3 (NLT)
"Commit your actions to the Lord, and your plans will succeed."

Wisdom: Discipline builds the relationship your emotions dream about.

Most relationships do not fall apart because two people stopped loving each other. They fall apart because two people never understood what love requires. Many people choose relationships out of loneliness, fear, pressure, or emotion rather than clarity and readiness. When you choose from emptiness, you repeat painful cycles.

I lived this firsthand. It was only through reflection, faith, and intentional growth that the cycle finally broke.

Scripture warns us about this tendency:

Hosea 4:6 (NLT)
"My people are being destroyed because they don't know me. Since you priests refuse to know me, I refuse to recognize you as my priests. Since you have forgotten the laws of your God, I will forget to bless your children."

When people rush into relationships without understanding themselves, without healing, and without spiritual clarity, they sabotage the relationship before it ever begins.

Some people enter relationships hoping the other person will fix what is broken inside them. They believe love will heal insecurity or erase wounds. They think marriage will create maturity, stability, or discipline.

But Scripture says:

Proverbs 13:16 (NLT)
"Wise people think before they act; fools don't and even brag about their foolishness."

Marriage does not create character.
It reveals it.

Whatever you avoid dealing with now becomes louder later.
Patterns repeat when you do not stop and heal.

Many people move from one relationship to another without ever asking themselves hard questions.

Why did the last one fail?
What patterns do I keep repeating?
What did I ignore because I did not want to be alone?

Instead of reflection, they seek distraction. Instead of growth, they seek comfort. Instead of accountability, they seek validation.

But nothing changes until you face your part in your own story.

One of the biggest lies people believe is that they will become responsible, committed, intentional, or healthy once they find the right person.

Scripture teaches the opposite:

Luke 16:10 (NLT)
“If you are faithful in little things, you will be faithful in large ones. But if you are dishonest in little things, you won’t be honest with greater responsibilities.”

If you are undisciplined before marriage, you will be undisciplined in marriage.
If you are emotionally unstable before partnership, you will be emotionally unstable in partnership.

Your partner cannot fix what you hide. No matter how loving they are, they cannot heal wounds you refuse to face.

Understanding your relational history is one of the most important steps before marriage. Your past does not define you, but it does educate you.

When you finally stop repeating cycles and start learning from them, everything changes. You no longer chase connection blindly. You no longer confuse attention with intention. You begin choosing from maturity instead of emotion.

Relationships fail when people enter them unprepared. They succeed when individuals do the internal work first.

This is where true relationship fitness begins.

Personal Reflection

For a long time, I believed love would cover what I had not yet disciplined. I entered relationships hoping connection would bring clarity, stability, or peace, only to realize that unresolved patterns follow you wherever you go.

I did not lack emotion or intention. I lacked readiness.

Cycles repeated because I had not slowed down long enough to examine them. Growth began when I stopped asking who was right for me and started asking who I needed to become. That shift changed everything.

Questions to Consider

1. What patterns do I see repeating in my past relationships?
2. Where have I chosen from loneliness, fear, or emotion instead of clarity?
3. What have I avoided taking responsibility for in previous relationships?
4. In what ways am I hoping a future partner will fix something I should address myself?
5. What would change if I treated preparation as my responsibility, not my partner's?

Chapter 3

Becoming the Partner You Want to Attract

Proverbs 27:17 (NLT)
“As iron sharpens iron, so a friend sharpens a friend.”

Wisdom: You cannot expect what you refuse to become.

Before you focus on finding the right person, you must become the kind of person who is ready for the love you want. Many people create long lists of qualities they desire in a partner: loyalty, communication, integrity, discipline. Yet they never ask the harder and more important question:

Am I becoming the person I am praying for?

Scripture teaches a simple and unavoidable truth:

Galatians 6:7 (NLT)
“Don’t be misled. You cannot mock the justice of God. You will always harvest what you plant.”

You cannot plant inconsistency and expect stability.
You cannot plant avoidance and expect communication.
You cannot plant insecurity and expect confidence.

Everything you desire in someone else should be growing in you.

If you want loyalty, practice loyalty.
If you want someone who communicates, learn to express your needs with honesty and respect.

If you want someone emotionally grounded and stable, build those qualities within yourself.

There is a principle often overlooked in relationships. You attract what reflects your current level of growth.

Scripture confirms this:

Proverbs 13:20 (NLT)
"Walk with the wise and become wise; associate with fools and get in trouble."

Your habits, mindset, and discipline shape who you attract and who you feel comfortable with.

Emotional maturity is one of the strongest predictors of relational success.

Emotional maturity means navigating conflict without disrespect, listening without defensiveness, communicating needs without blame, and responding thoughtfully instead of reacting impulsively.

James teaches this clearly:

James 1:19 (NLT)
"Understand this, my dear brothers and sisters: You must all be quick to listen, slow to speak, and slow to get angry."

Integrity is the foundation.

Integrity is not just honesty. It is alignment between your values, your words, and your behavior. Without integrity, trust slowly erodes. People do not trust perfection. They trust consistency.

Consistency reveals character.

Anyone can act right for a season. Anyone can be impressive when things are easy. Consistency reveals who you are when motivation fades and pressure increases.

Scripture reinforces this truth:

Proverbs 25:14 (NLT)
"A person who promises a gift but doesn't give it is like clouds and wind that bring no rain."

Consistency builds safety.
Safety builds connection.

Understanding what it means to be equally yoked is also essential. This concept is not only about faith. It includes alignment in values, lifestyle, habits, and emotional maturity.

Two people walking in different directions create friction.
Two people walking in unity create peace.

There is also a difference between standards and unrealistic expectations.

Standards protect your values.
Unrealistic expectations protect your ego.

Standards say, "I require respect, honesty, and consistency."
Unrealistic expectations say, "I expect perfection."

Becoming the partner you want to attract means showing up with maturity, emotional steadiness, and purpose. Not perfection, but progress.

You do not attract what you want.
You attract what you are becoming.

-

Personal Reflection

For many years, I focused more on what I wanted in a partner than on who I was becoming. I held standards for others that I had not fully developed in myself. I wanted loyalty, emotional stability, and consistency, yet there were areas in my own life where my growth had not caught up with my expectations.

Real change began when I stopped asking why I was not attracting the right person and started looking honestly at my own habits, discipline, and emotional maturity. Becoming the partner I wanted required humility, consistency, and a willingness to grow even when it was uncomfortable.

-

Questions to Consider

1. Am I currently becoming the kind of person I want to be in a relationship with?
2. Which qualities I desire most in a partner am I actively developing in myself?
3. Where am I inconsistent in my words and actions?
4. What standards protect my values, and which expectations may be unrealistic?
5. How does my current level of emotional maturity influence who I attract?

Chapter 4

Your Relationship with God Determines Everything

Pillar One: Spiritual Fitness

Proverbs 3:6 (NLT)
"Seek his will in all you do, and he will show you which path to take."

Wisdom: The strength of your relationship depends on the strength of your foundation.

Your spiritual life is not separate from your relational life. It sets the tone for everything: how you love, how you communicate, how you recover from conflict, and how you make decisions.

Scripture teaches this clearly:

Psalm 127:1 (NLT)
"Unless the Lord builds a house, the work of the builders is wasted. Unless the Lord protects a city, guarding it with sentries will do no good."

A relationship that is not built on God lacks structure, direction, and staying power.

One of the greatest causes of relational struggle is spiritual misalignment. Two people may have chemistry, history, attraction, and emotional connection, but if they do not share values, priorities, or spiritual direction, they will walk in different paths.

Scripture warns us plainly:

Amos 3:3 (NLT)
“Can two people walk together without agreeing on the direction?”

The answer is no. Misalignment creates friction.

Your relationship with God shapes your identity.

If you enter a relationship insecure, unsure of who you are, or dependent on someone else for worth, the relationship becomes strained. But when your identity is anchored in God, your value is not fragile.

Ephesians 2:10 (NLT)
“For we are God’s masterpiece. He has created us anew in Christ Jesus, so we can do the good things he planned for us long ago.”

A person who knows they are God’s masterpiece is not easily shaken, manipulated, or emotionally unstable.

Prayer strengthens connection.

A person who prays becomes a person who listens. Prayer builds humility. It creates space for conviction, correction, and clarity.

Scripture says:

James 5:16 (NLT)
“Confess your sins to each other and pray for each other so that you may be healed. The earnest prayer of a righteous person has great power and produces wonderful results.”

Prayer builds peace within you and connection between you and your partner.

Accountability protects spiritual growth.

No one becomes spiritually stronger in isolation. Scripture reinforces this truth:

Proverbs 27:17 (NLT)
“As iron sharpens iron, so a friend sharpens a friend.”

You cannot grow spiritually while surrounding yourself with people who encourage dysfunction. You need people who challenge you, not people who comfort your excuses.

Community reinforces alignment.

Healthy relationships rarely grow in isolation. You need spiritually mature people around you who can support your walk and offer wisdom.

Discernment protects you from emotional decisions.

Feelings are powerful, but they are not wise leaders. Scripture warns:

Jeremiah 17:9 (NLT)
“The human heart is the most deceitful of all things, and desperately wicked. Who really knows how bad it is?”

Discernment helps you see beyond chemistry and into character.

Desire is not enough.

Many people desire marriage, but few prepare spiritually for it.

A relationship built on God creates direction.
A relationship built on emotion creates confusion.

When God is first, everything else aligns.

-

Personal Reflection

For much of my life, I tried to build relationships on effort, intention, and emotion rather than on surrender to God. I wanted connection without first seeking alignment. When my relationship with God was inconsistent, my relationships reflected that same instability.

Everything began to change when I stopped asking God to bless my relationships and started inviting Him to shape me first. When God became the foundation instead of an addition, clarity replaced confusion, and peace replaced striving.

-

Questions to Consider

1. How does my relationship with God currently shape my decisions and relationships?
2. Where do I rely more on emotions than discernment?
3. In what ways do I seek God's direction before making relational decisions?
4. How does my spiritual life influence my sense of identity and worth?
5. What would change in my relationships if God truly remained first?

Chapter 5

Purpose, Calling, and Kingdom Partnership

Pillar One: Spiritual Fitness

Habakkuk 2:2 (NLT)
"Then the Lord said to me, 'Write my answer plainly on tablets, so that a runner can carry the correct message to others.'"

Wisdom: Purpose protects you from choosing someone who cannot go where you are called to go.

Marriage is not just companionship. It is partnership. Two lives joining with intention, direction, and kingdom purpose. A healthy relationship is not simply about enjoying life together. It is about walking in alignment with God while building something that reflects His calling.

Scripture affirms this:

Ecclesiastes 4:9 (NLT)
"Two people are better off than one, for they can help each other succeed."

Purpose multiplies when aligned.
Purpose suffers when mismatched.

Purpose provides clarity. When you know where God is leading you, decisions become simpler. You stop negotiating with emotion and start evaluating with discernment. Purpose acts as a filter. It exposes distractions quickly and reveals when attraction is strong but alignment is weak.

Without purpose, people often choose relationships based on loneliness, chemistry, or pressure. They ignore warning signs because connection feels good in the moment. But when you know your direction, it becomes clearer who belongs in your life and who does not.

Many relationships struggle because one or both people lack direction. Without vision, relationships drift. Without calling, decisions become emotional instead of intentional.

Scripture speaks directly to this:

Proverbs 29:18 (NLT)
"When people do not accept divine guidance, they run wild. But whoever obeys the law is joyful."

A relationship without shared direction becomes exhausting. One person pulls while the other resists. One grows while the other remains stagnant. Over time, resentment replaces unity.

Marriage is meant to multiply purpose, not diminish it. A kingdom partnership strengthens mission, deepens faith, and expands influence. It is two people moving forward together with the same God at the center.

Chemistry creates excitement, but it does not create direction. Chemistry can exist without commitment, maturity, or endurance. Purpose creates longevity. Relationships built on chemistry alone may feel intense at first, but they often lack stability over time. Purpose gives a relationship weight, resilience, and staying power.

Know who you are before joining your life with someone else. You do not need to understand every detail of your calling, but you must understand your direction. Without that clarity, you risk choosing someone who matches your past instead of supporting your future.

Vision protects relationships. Couples with vision do not drift. They do not wake up confused about why they are together. They build intentionally and make decisions through the lens of purpose rather than impulse.

Scripture confirms this truth:

Proverbs 19:21 (NLT)
"You can make many plans, but the Lord's purpose will prevail."

Non-negotiables matter. These are not preferences such as personality or appearance. They are values. Convictions that define how you live and what you honor.

Standards protect your calling. Compromise may feel loving in the moment, but compromising your calling will always cost more than losing a relationship. Some people lose themselves trying to hold onto someone God never sent.

Compromising purpose rarely feels costly at first. It often looks like patience, understanding, or sacrifice. Over time, however, it produces frustration, confusion, and loss of identity. You cannot sustain peace in a relationship that requires you to abandon who God is shaping you to be.

Purpose naturally raises your standards. When you understand what God has called you to, you stop entertaining relationships that drain you, distract you, or detour you. You stop negotiating with what feels good and start honoring what is right.

A kingdom partnership elevates both people. It creates space for growth rather than requiring one person to shrink. One person's calling should never suppress the other's.

Do not look for someone to complete you.
Look for someone who can run with you.

Personal Reflection

There were seasons in my life when I valued connection more than calling. I ignored misalignment because chemistry felt easier than clarity. I convinced myself that compromise was love, only to realize later that I was slowly drifting away from who God was calling me to be.

Growth came when I understood that the right relationship will never require me to abandon my direction. Purpose did not limit my options. It protected me. Once I became clear about where God was leading me, the question was no longer who I wanted, but who could run with me.

-

Questions to Consider

1. Do I have clarity about my direction, even if I do not know every detail?
2. Have I ever compromised my calling to keep a relationship?
3. What values are non-negotiable for me in a future partnership?
4. How do I discern whether someone can walk in the same direction as me?
5. In what ways can my future relationship multiply purpose instead of draining it?

Chapter 6

Money Reveals Character

Pillar Two: Financial Fitness

Luke 16:10 (NLT)
"If you are faithful in little things, you will be faithful in large ones. But if you are dishonest in little things, you won't be honest with greater responsibilities."

Wisdom: Your financial habits preach louder than your words.

Money exposes who you are more than almost any other area of life. It reveals priorities, discipline, mindset, maturity, and self-control. Many couples do not discover the truth about each other's financial habits until they are already committed, and by then, emotional damage has often begun.

Scripture warns clearly:

Proverbs 21:20 (NLT)
"The wise have wealth and luxury, but fools spend whatever they get."

Money is emotional. It represents security, comfort, trust, identity, control, and fear. This is why financial conversations can feel vulnerable and even threatening. But avoiding those conversations does not protect a relationship. It weakens it.

Debt tells a story.

Not all debt is bad. Some debt comes from education, emergencies, or strategic investments. Other debt comes from emotional spending, impulse, lack of discipline, a desire to impress others, or avoidance behaviors. The issue is not having debt. The issue is whether someone takes responsibility for it.

Scripture reminds us:

Proverbs 22:7 (NLT)
"Just as the rich rule the poor, so the borrower is servant to the lender."

Debt becomes a chain when character does not manage it properly.

Spending habits reveal priorities. People consistently spend money on what matters most to them, even if they claim otherwise. For some, it is image. For some, comfort. For some, entertainment. For some, escape.

Financially mature people understand the difference between wants and needs. They think long term. They delay gratification.

Savings reveal discipline.

Savings is not about income. It is about structure, consistency, and wisdom.

A person with savings is preparing for the future.
A person with no savings is surviving the present.

Financial honesty protects relationships. Hidden spending, secret debt, and financial avoidance destroy trust. A financially dishonest partner is emotionally unsafe because finances are deeply tied to security and stability.

Financial insecurity is not a deal breaker.
Financial avoidance is.

Anyone can grow.
Anyone can learn.

But someone unwilling to budget, unwilling to plan, or unwilling to face their habits is not ready for partnership.

Money arguments rarely happen because of dollars. They happen because of fear, unclear expectations, misaligned values, lack of communication, and inconsistent habits.

Preparing financially before marriage is not about perfection. It is about stewardship. It is about demonstrating that you can manage what God entrusts to you.

Money does not define your worth.
But it does reveal your discipline.

And discipline is what builds or breaks a relationship.

-

Personal Reflection

For a long time, I underestimated how much my financial habits revealed about me. I did not view money as a reflection of discipline or character. I saw it only as a tool to live and enjoy life.

Looking back, I can see how avoidance, inconsistency, and emotional decisions created unnecessary stress and limited my ability to lead well in a relationship. Growth began when I stopped justifying my habits and started taking responsibility for them.

Learning to steward money wisely was not about becoming wealthy. It was about becoming trustworthy. Financial maturity taught me that love requires stability, honesty, and preparation, not excuses.

-

Questions to Consider

1. What do my financial habits reveal about my priorities and discipline?
2. Where do emotions most influence my spending decisions?
3. How honest am I with myself about debt, budgeting, and financial responsibility?
4. If someone joined their life with mine today, what financial stress would they inherit?
5. What steps can I take now to become a better steward of what God has entrusted to me?

Chapter 7

Building a Financial Future Together

Pillar Two: Financial Fitness

Proverbs 21:5 (NLT)
"Good planning and hard work lead to prosperity, but hasty shortcuts lead to poverty."

Wisdom: Shared vision creates shared peace.

When two people enter a relationship, they are not just joining emotions. They are joining systems. Two financial histories. Two sets of habits. Two definitions of what feels normal.

Money becomes a shared language, and how a couple approaches it will either create unity or tension. Financial decisions influence daily life, long term goals, and emotional security more than most people realize.

Every couple has a financial rhythm.
Some people are strict planners.
Others are spontaneous.
Some save.
Some spend.
Some invest.
Some avoid.

These rhythms are often formed long before a relationship begins. They are shaped by upbringing, life experiences, and even past financial mistakes. Without awareness, those patterns quietly follow people into relationships and begin influencing decisions automatically.

The goal is not to make both people identical.
The goal is alignment.

Scripture teaches this clearly.

Amos 3:3 (NLT)
“Can two people walk together without agreeing on the direction?”

Without alignment, finances become emotional. Decisions feel personal. Conversations turn reactive. Small disagreements carry unnecessary weight.

A shared vision is the foundation of financial peace.

One partner may want to save.
The other may want to spend.
One may prioritize investing.
The other may value convenience or comfort.

Without a shared vision, every financial decision feels like a battle. Each choice becomes a negotiation instead of a collaboration.

But when vision is unified, decisions become easier. Purpose replaces pressure, and clarity replaces confusion.

Alignment does not eliminate differences. It gives differences a framework. When both people understand why they are saving, spending, or investing, conversations become less reactive and more intentional.

Financial alignment shifts the focus from individual preference to shared purpose. Instead of asking, “What do I want right now?" the question becomes, "Does this support where we are going together?"

Budgeting is not restriction. It is clarity.

A budget tells your money where to go instead of wondering where it went. It removes guesswork and replaces uncertainty with intention.

Budgeting also creates emotional safety. When both people know the plan, fear decreases and trust increases. Clarity removes assumptions and prevents resentment from quietly forming over time.

Jesus emphasized the importance of planning.

Luke 14:28 (NLT)
"But do not begin until you count the cost. For who would begin construction of a building without first calculating the cost to see if there is enough money to finish it?"

Budgeting is simply counting the cost before trouble comes. It is a decision to be proactive rather than reactive. It allows a couple to make choices from clarity instead of fear, and from unity instead of impulse.

Income differences do not define a relationship. Respect does.

Money is a shared resource, not a scoreboard. Whether one partner earns more or both earn equally, unity is what matters most. Comparison creates tension, but transparency builds trust. When finances are treated as a joint responsibility rather than a competition, security grows and resentment fades.

Roles within financial management can and often do shift over time. One person may be more detail oriented with numbers, while the other may be stronger in long term planning or vision. What matters is not who handles which task, but that both people remain informed, involved, and respected. Financial leadership is shared responsibility, not control.

Planning major milestones early protects a relationship from unnecessary stress. These conversations create alignment before pressure arrives and allow a couple to move forward with clarity rather than confusion.

Marriage
Children
Homeownership
Investment
Retirement
Generational wealth

These topics do not require exact answers, but they do require shared direction. Avoiding these conversations does not make them disappear. It simply delays the cost. Early alignment prevents future conflict and builds confidence in the path ahead.

Scripture reminds us of the importance of thoughtful preparation.

Proverbs 13:16 (NLT)
"Wise people think before they act, but fools do not and even brag about their foolishness."

Financial maturity means preparing instead of reacting. It means making decisions with the future in mind rather than being driven by the urgency of the present moment. Wisdom considers consequences and chooses discipline over impulse.

Generosity strengthens a relationship. Giving keeps the heart grounded and prevents money from becoming an idol. It reminds both people that provision ultimately comes from God and that resources are meant to be stewarded, not hoarded. Generosity creates gratitude, perspective, and unity.

Tithing, Stewardship, and Trust

Tithing is one of the clearest ways Scripture teaches us to place God first in our finances. A tithe, meaning a tenth, is not simply a financial transaction. It is an act of trust, obedience, and alignment. When we tithe, we acknowledge that everything we have comes from God and that we are stewards, not owners.

Malachi 3:10 (NLT)
"Bring all the tithes into the storehouse so there will be enough food in my Temple. If you do," says the Lord of Heaven's Armies, "I will open the windows of heaven for you. I will pour out a blessing so great you won't have enough room to take it in! Try it! Put me to the test!"

Tithing is not about earning God's favor. It is about honoring Him with what He has entrusted to us. It trains the heart to trust God rather than money.

Matthew 23:23 (NLT)"What sorrow awaits you teachers of religious law and you Pharisees. Hypocrites! For you are careful to tithe even the tiniest income from your herb gardens, but you ignore the more important aspects of the law—justice, mercy, and faith. You should tithe, yes, but do not neglect the more important things."

When a couple agrees to honor God first financially, it creates unity, clarity, and peace. Money no longer sits in the position of authority. God does.

As an expression of this conviction, I am giving ten percent of the profits from this book to Hope City Church.

Financial unity takes time. Wealth is not built overnight, and debt is rarely eliminated in a single season. Progress requires communication, patience, consistency, and grace. Alignment is formed through ongoing conversation, not one-time decisions.

A strong financial future is not created by accident.
It is built through partnership.

When money is handled with wisdom and unity, it no longer becomes a source of fear. Instead, it becomes a foundation of peace, supporting the life and future a couple is intentionally building together.

Personal Reflection

There was a time when I underestimated how important shared financial vision truly was. I believed good intentions would be enough, but I learned that intention without planning still creates tension. Financial peace began to grow when I became more disciplined, more transparent, and more willing to have uncomfortable conversations early instead of avoiding them. Stewardship taught me that unity requires effort, humility, and consistency. Building a financial future together is not about control or perfection. It is about trust and shared direction.

Questions to Consider

1. How do I currently approach planning for the future?
2. What financial conversations feel uncomfortable for me, and why?
3. How does tithing, or the practice of honoring God first financially, shape my current view of money and stewardship?
4. What does financial unity mean to me beyond income and numbers?
5. How can I practice communication and transparency around finances now?

Chapter 8

Your Body Is Part of Your Relationship

Pillar Three: Physical Fitness

1 Corinthians 6:20 (NLT)
"For God bought you with a high price. So you must honor God with your body."

Wisdom: A healthy body strengthens a healthy love.

Your physical health influences every part of your relationship. It affects your energy, patience, confidence, intimacy, and emotional presence. Many people forget that physical fitness is not cosmetic. It is relational. How you care for your body shapes how you show up for another person.

God designed the body to be a vessel of strength and stewardship. When you care for it, you are not only caring for yourself. You are caring for your future spouse. Your body affects how you respond to stress, how emotionally present you are, and how much capacity you have to love well.

Your body and your emotions are deeply connected.

Fatigue affects patience.
Poor nutrition affects mood.
Lack of movement affects clarity.
Neglect affects confidence.

These are not surface level concerns. They influence communication, emotional regulation, and resilience during conflict.

Scripture reminds us of this connection.

Proverbs 17:22 (NLT)
“A cheerful heart is good medicine, but a broken spirit saps a person’s strength.”

Physical discipline supports emotional strength. When your body is cared for, your mind is clearer and your emotional capacity increases. When your body is neglected, even small challenges can feel overwhelming.

Lifestyle compatibility matters more than many people realize.

If one person prioritizes health and the other avoids it, tension eventually builds. It may not surface immediately, but over time it shows up in energy levels, shared activities, confidence, and intimacy. This is not about having identical habits. It is about shared values.

You do not need the same routines.
You need mutual investment.

Physical habits reflect discipline. Showing up for your body builds traits that strengthen relationships far beyond the physical.

Consistency
Patience
Self-control
Resilience
Long term thinking

Scripture speaks directly to this discipline.

1 Corinthians 9:27 (NLT)
“I discipline my body like an athlete, training it to do what it should. Otherwise, I fear that after preaching to others I myself might be disqualified.”

These traits overflow into communication, conflict resolution, intimacy, and daily energy. A person who practices discipline physically often brings the same mindset into other areas of life.

Physical health also builds confidence. Not ego or vanity, but confidence rooted in strength, energy, and self respect. When someone feels capable in their body, they tend to engage more fully, withdraw less, and carry themselves with calm assurance.

Health directly impacts intimacy.

Someone who feels good in their body is generally more present, more engaged, and more emotionally available. Confidence in one’s body often leads to deeper connection and vulnerability. Avoidance and withdrawal are frequently rooted in neglect, not lack of desire.

Your future marriage benefits when you prioritize your health now.

Taking care of your body is relational stewardship. The version of you that shows up in your relationship is the version you consistently build through daily habits.

Physical Stewardship and Daily Discipline

Physical fitness is not only about movement. It is also about restraint, wisdom, and stewardship. Scripture warns against gluttony not to shame us, but to protect us. Excess, especially in what we eat and drink, slowly damages the body and weakens discipline.

Gluttony is a sin, particularly in a culture where overconsumption is normalized. Many people are harming themselves through what they eat and drink, often without recognizing the long-term cost. In doing so, they are disrespecting the temples God entrusted to them. Our bodies were not designed to be disposal systems.

This neglect does not affect only the individual. When we fail to care for our health, it impacts our relationships. Energy decreases. Patience shortens. Confidence erodes. Over time, physical neglect becomes relational strain. Caring for your body is not selfish. It is an act of respect toward the person who will share life with you.

What we consume matters. Sugary sodas and juices flood the body with sugar faster than it can process. Juice is often perceived as healthy, yet it delivers sugar without the fiber that slows absorption. If you want orange juice, eat an orange. If you want apple juice, eat an apple. Whole foods nourish the body without overwhelming it.

Strength training is another essential component of physical stewardship. It strengthens bones, builds muscle, and helps prevent conditions such as osteoporosis. It supports balance, mobility, and long term independence. You do not need to train to be an athlete or bodybuilder, but you do need to use your muscles.

Simple movement matters. Walking increases circulation and mental clarity. Resistance training builds resilience and strength. You do not need to be an expert to begin. Go to a gym and start with basic machines. Learn as you go. Hiring a personal trainer can help, but it is not required. Consistency matters more than intensity.

Rest is one of the most overlooked aspects of physical health. Even God rested on the seventh day. Rest is not laziness. It is wisdom.

Sleep restores the body, stabilizes emotions, and protects mental clarity. Chronic exhaustion affects patience, decision making, and intimacy. Rest directly supports peace.

I have learned that protecting my rest protects my peace. When it is time to rest, I leave. There are exceptions, but they remain exceptions. My peace is not for sale, and neither is my health.

Discipline in eating, movement, and rest shapes the version of you that shows up in your relationship. These daily choices determine your energy, emotional presence, confidence, and capacity to love well.

Your body will change with age. That is normal.
Your commitment to caring for it should not.

Your health is not separate from your relationship.
It is part of it.

Personal Reflection

I have always valued physical fitness, but there was a season of my life when I learned just how fragile health can be. After serving in the United States Air Force during Desert Storm and later graduating college and beginning a successful career at Southwestern Bell, my life took an unexpected turn. I developed atrial fibrillation, and within a single year I gained nearly seventy pounds.

For the first time in my life, I could not physically train. My energy was gone, my diet suffered, and my health declined rapidly. I was taking nineteen heart medications a day, and many of the things I had once taken for granted were suddenly out of reach. In that season, I experienced firsthand what so many people struggle with every day. I understood frustration, limitation, and the feeling of being trapped in a body that would not cooperate.

Because I could not work out, I had to teach myself how to eat better. Nutrition became my lifeline. I learned that stewardship does not begin with strength. It begins with obedience. Even when movement was limited, discipline still mattered. That season reshaped how I understood health and humility.

In 2007, God restored my heart through the hands of Dr. Nasir. I am deeply grateful that God placed him in my life at exactly the right time. With my heart healed, I was given a second opportunity. Not just to train again, but to understand how nutrition and fitness work together in balance.

When I was finally able to train again, I did so with gratitude. Training and eating well were no longer obligations. They were privileges. Over time, consistency rebuilt my strength. I became healthier than I had ever been, and eventually I surpassed a personal benchmark I had set decades earlier. I benched 405 pounds, surpassing my previous competitive best of 401 pounds, a record I had set at Yokota Air Force Base in Japan when I was nineteen years old.

That milestone was meaningful not because of the number on the bar, but because of what it represented. It reminded me that restoration is possible, discipline still works, and God is faithful through every season. It reinforced a truth I now carry with conviction. It is never too late to start. Health is not about where you have been. It is about where you are going.

We serve a strong and mighty God. He meets us at the beginning, walks with us through the process, and sustains us through whatever the finish looks like. Physical fitness, like faith, is a journey built one obedient step at a time. Caring for your body honors God, strengthens relationships, and equips you to show up with greater energy, presence, and purpose.

Questions to Consider

1. How does my physical health influence my energy, mood, and emotional presence?
2. What habits support my long term health, and which ones undermine it?
3. In what ways does physical discipline spill into other areas of my life?
4. How do I view caring for my body as stewardship rather than appearance?
5. What one physical habit could I strengthen this month?

Chapter 9

Building Healthy Routines as a Team

Pillar Three: Physical Fitness

Ecclesiastes 4:9 (NLT)
"Two people are better off than one, for they can help each other succeed."

Wisdom: Shared habits build shared strength.

Healthy couples do not grow by accident. They grow through shared rhythms. When two people intentionally build healthy routines together, they strengthen not only their bodies, but also their connection, trust, and sense of partnership.

Healthy routines do not require perfection. They require consistency.

Small habits practiced daily build momentum. Over time, those habits create trust, stability, and unity. The goal is not to create identical lifestyles, but to create supportive ones where both people feel encouraged rather than pressured.

Eating habits influence relational harmony more than many couples realize.

Food affects mood, energy, clarity, stress levels, and sleep. When eating is chaotic, emotions often follow. Couples who prepare meals together, plan intentionally, or simply make mindful choices build connection that goes far beyond nutrition. Shared meals become shared moments.

Scripture speaks to this balance.

1 Corinthians 10:31 (NLT)
“So whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, do it all for the glory of God.”

When food is approached with gratitude and wisdom, eating becomes an act of stewardship rather than stress. It shifts from control or guilt to care and awareness.

Movement also builds connection.

Working out together can be powerful. It creates shared progress, accountability, and emotional bonding. Even when couples do not follow the same workout routine, encouraging one another and supporting consistency builds unity. Movement improves mood, resilience, patience, and motivation.

Exercise also reduces stress, one of the silent disruptors of connection. When stress is unmanaged, communication suffers. When stress is released through movement, couples often find themselves more patient, present, and emotionally available.

Sleep patterns matter more than most people admit.

Lack of rest leads to irritability, miscommunication, anxiety, and emotional sensitivity. Exhaustion lowers tolerance and increases reactivity. God designed rest as protection, not weakness.

Psalm 4:8 (NLT)
“In peace I will lie down and sleep, for you alone, O Lord, will keep me safe.”

Rest is not laziness. It is emotional maintenance. Couples who protect rest protect peace. Shared routines around sleep often create more stability than any other habit.

Active living also builds shared memories.

Walking, hiking, traveling, playing sports, and choosing movement together create natural opportunities for laughter, conversation, and connection. Couples who move together often feel closer, argue less, and experience deeper emotional and physical intimacy.

Support without pressure is essential.

Encouragement builds trust.
Pressure creates resistance.
Control builds resentment.

Healthy couples inspire one another through example, not demands. Growth feels safe when it is invited, not enforced.

Communication shapes routines.

Healthy couples talk openly about goals, limitations, comfort zones, preferences, schedules, and energy levels. They agree on rhythms that strengthen both people instead of pressuring one person to conform. Flexibility allows routines to evolve as life changes.

Healthy routines strengthen far more than the body.

They strengthen teamwork, trust, emotional connection, and long-term stability. The habits you build together today quietly shape the life you will live together tomorrow.

Personal Reflection

I have learned that the healthiest relationships are built through ordinary, consistent choices. It is rarely the big moments that determine long term connection. It is the daily rhythms. The meals you share. The walks you take. The way you encourage rather than pressure. The way you protect rest and peace.

I have also seen how easily routines can drift when they are not intentional. Life gets busy. Schedules change. Stress increases. Without shared rhythms, couples often begin living parallel lives instead of connected ones.

Building healthy routines together does not mean doing everything the same way. It means choosing unity over convenience and consistency over perfection. When two people commit to supporting one another's growth, routines become a place where trust is strengthened rather than tested.

My prayer is that couples learn to view routines not as restrictions, but as foundations. Shared habits create shared strength. Shared strength creates relationships that are resilient, connected, and prepared for the seasons ahead.

Questions to Consider

1. What routines currently shape my daily life?
2. How do my habits either support or sabotage connection with others?
3. How do I respond to encouragement versus pressure?
4. What rhythms would help create peace and stability in a future relationship?
5. How can I practice consistency without perfection?

Chapter 10

Emotional Intelligence and Self-Awareness

Pillar Four: Mental Fitness

Proverbs 14:29 (NLT)
"People with understanding control their anger; a hot temper shows great foolishness."

Wisdom: Emotions do not ruin relationships. Unexamined emotions do.

Emotional intelligence is one of the strongest predictors of relational success. Attraction may bring two people together, but emotional maturity is what keeps them together. Chemistry can create connection, but emotional intelligence determines whether that connection is safe, stable, and sustainable.

At its core, emotional intelligence begins with self-awareness.

Self-awareness is the ability to recognize what you feel, why you feel it, and how those emotions influence your thoughts, words, and behavior. Without self-awareness, emotions control the relationship. With self-awareness, emotions become information rather than instruction.

Scripture speaks clearly about the importance of understanding oneself.

Proverbs 14:8 (NLT)
"The prudent understand where they are going, but fools deceive themselves."

Without self-awareness, emotions turn into reactions.
With self-awareness, emotions become signals that guide thoughtful response.

Everyone has emotional triggers. Triggers themselves are not the problem. They reveal unresolved places that need attention. The real issue is unmanaged reaction.

Your partner is not responsible for healing what happened before they arrived. Healing begins with ownership, not blame. When unresolved wounds are left unexamined, they quietly shape expectations, reactions, and communication.

Childhood wounds often resurface in adult relationships.

If you grew up without emotional safety, communication may feel threatening.
If you grew up with consistent criticism, correction may trigger shame.
If you experienced abandonment, silence may feel like rejection.

Intimacy has a way of exposing unhealed places. The closer a relationship becomes, the more likely old patterns are activated. This is not failure. It is an invitation to grow.

Scripture reminds us:

Proverbs 4:23 (NLT)
"Guard your heart above all else, for it determines the course of your life."

Guarding your heart is not about avoiding love. It is about becoming emotionally healthy enough to love well. It means owning your emotions and responses so they do not spill destructively into your relationship.

Emotional maturity is essential to mental fitness.

Maturity is the ability to pause before reacting, to feel without exploding, to acknowledge emotion without weaponizing it, and to respond thoughtfully instead of impulsively. Maturity does not mean suppressing emotion. It means managing your emotions rather than allowing your emotions to manage you.

An emotionally mature person is safe to love.

Communication patterns reveal emotional maturity.

Healthy communication includes listening without defensiveness, expressing needs without hostility, and addressing conflict without disrespect. It allows space for disagreement without threatening connection.

Unhealthy communication shows up as stonewalling, yelling, blaming, mocking, shutting down, or withholding affection. These behaviors may feel protective in the moment, but they erode trust over time.

Scripture speaks directly to this:

Proverbs 15:1 (NLT)
"A gentle answer deflects anger, but harsh words make tempers flare."

Tone matters.
Presence matters.
Approach matters.

Conflict does not destroy relationships. Immaturity does.

Conflict is normal and unavoidable. Two people will disagree. They will misunderstand one another. They will see situations differently. What determines the health of the relationship is not the absence of conflict, but the ability to navigate it with humility and self-control.

Emotionally healthy couples use conflict to grow, not to win.

Self-awareness creates relational safety. It allows you to recognize when your reaction is rooted in the past, when emotion is overwhelming clarity, when you need space instead of escalation, and when communication is necessary instead of withdrawal.

Self-awareness makes you accountable for your behavior rather than expecting your partner to absorb it. It shifts responsibility inward instead of outward.

Love becomes safer when both people understand themselves.

Emotional intelligence does not eliminate emotion. It gives emotion direction. It allows relationships to move beyond survival into connection, depth, and fulfillment.

Mental fitness is not about being emotionally perfect. It is about being emotionally honest, regulated, and responsible.

Personal Reflection

This chapter required honesty. Emotional self-awareness did not come naturally to me, and for a long time I underestimated how much it mattered in relationships. I had good intentions, but I did not recognize how often unexamined emotions were shaping my reactions, my communication, and my expectations of others.

The first three relationships in my life involved some serious triggers for me. My high school girlfriend, my first wife, and my second wife. I was still a young man, but I did not give and forgive. I did not know how to give it to the Lord and forgive the person who wronged me. In my mind, I could not trust women. I believed that given the opportunity, they would betray me. At that time, I was not emotionally or mentally fit.

Over time, I learned what it truly meant to give and forgive. Today, I am good friends with my high school girlfriend, and many of my best childhood memories are tied to her family. My first wife is one of my closest friends. My second wife is a good woman. I say often that good people, especially good young people, can still make poor decisions when given the opportunity.

We can either go through life's lessons or we can grow through them. It took me many years, but I chose to grow through these lessons. Learning to give and forgive became a defining part of my emotional intelligence, my self-awareness, and the way I now approach relationships.

Questions to Consider

1. What emotions do I struggle most to regulate?
2. What triggers tend to lead me toward unhealthy reactions?
3. How aware am I of the connection between my past experiences and present reactions?
4. How do I typically respond to conflict, and what does that reveal about my maturity?
5. What would emotional safety look like if I consistently practiced self-awareness?

-

Chapter 11

Healing, Growth, and Personal Responsibility

Pillar Four: Mental Fitness

Psalm 147:3 (NLT)
"He heals the brokenhearted and bandages their wounds."

Wisdom: If you do not heal what hurt you, you will bleed on people who did not cut you.

Healing is not optional if you want a healthy relationship. The unaddressed parts of your life will eventually surface in your communication, reactions, expectations, and capacity to love. What remains unresolved does not stay hidden. It leaks into how you respond under pressure and how safe you feel in intimacy.

Growth begins with honesty.

Many people repeat painful relationship cycles not because of bad luck, but because they continue showing up as the same version of themselves. Patterns repeat when they go unexamined. Nothing changes until awareness interrupts the cycle.

Scripture speaks clearly to this process:

Lamentations 3:40 (NLT)
"Instead, let us test and examine our ways. Let us turn back to the Lord."

Healing begins by looking inward, not outward. It requires courage to examine your own patterns rather than focusing on what others did wrong. Reflection creates clarity. Clarity creates change.

Personal responsibility is not shame.
Personal responsibility is empowerment.

Responsibility means acknowledging your patterns, recognizing your contribution to conflict, admitting where you ignored red flags, and owning where you lacked boundaries. This is not about self-condemnation. It is about freedom.

You cannot change what you refuse to own.

Healing requires facing the truth about yourself.

Avoidance is seductive.
Suppression feels easier.
Distraction feels safer.

But nothing heals through hiding. Pain does not disappear when ignored. It waits, then resurfaces at the worst possible moment.

Scripture reminds us:

John 8:32 (NLT)
"And you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free."

Healing requires truth, even when it is uncomfortable. Truth exposes what needs attention so restoration can begin. Freedom follows honesty, not avoidance.

Support accelerates healing.

God never intended healing to happen in isolation. Therapists, mentors, pastors, counselors, and wise community help bring perspective and accountability that we cannot provide for ourselves.

Proverbs 20:18 (NLT)
“Plans succeed through good counsel; do not go to war without wise advice.”

Strong people ask for help.
Healed people remain teachable.

Growth often requires unlearning.

Some behaviors once protected you but now sabotage connection. Shutting down emotionally, expecting rejection, assuming the worst, choosing chaos because it feels familiar, or staying guarded because vulnerability once caused pain may have served a purpose in the past. But survival strategies do not build intimacy.

Walls built for survival eventually become barriers to love.

Managing stress is also part of healing.

Stress affects tone.
Stress affects patience.
Stress affects empathy.
Stress affects presence.

A person who is consistently overwhelmed may unintentionally create instability in a relationship. Healing stabilizes your emotional responses and allows you to show up consistently instead of reactively.

Boundaries are a form of self-respect.

Boundaries teach others how to treat you, and they teach you how to treat yourself. They clarify what is acceptable, what is healthy, and what is not negotiable.

Scripture affirms this principle:

Proverbs 4:23 (NLT)
"Guard your heart above all else, for it determines the course of your life."

Boundaries are not walls meant to keep love out.
They are gates designed to protect what matters and guide what enters.

Healing does not mean forgetting what happened. It means the pain no longer controls you. It means you respond instead of react. You communicate instead of collapse. You choose partners from clarity instead of trauma.

A healed version of you will love differently.
And you will be loved differently in return.

Personal Reflection

There was a time when I believed growth would come naturally for me. I assumed healing would happen on its own if I simply kept moving forward. What I learned instead is that time alone does not heal wounds. Awareness, personal responsibility, and intentional growth do, and all three require surrender to God.

This chapter does bleed over slightly from Chapter 9, because many of the truths I discovered there are still true here. The difference is timing and perspective. This reflection takes place many years later, after my mental fitness had already come a long way.

I met a woman with a huge servant heart and, to me, one of the most beautiful women I had ever known. I fell for her in a way I never had before. This time, I was on the other side of the coin. She was an incredible woman who, like all of us, had been through a lot. In many ways, her life had been marked by extreme stress.

We dated for a short period of time and then she ended things. My heart was broken in a way I had never experienced before, and I honestly did not understand why. What I came to realize is this. If we do not heal from our past and we do not fully surrender to God, we can miss exactly what He wants for us.

I truly believed that she and I were meant to be together. That belief became a source of deep frustration, and if I am being honest, I never really got over that frustration. At one point, the Lord told me that I needed to simply be her church friend. For obvious reasons, that was challenging. Still, I did my best. I sat with her every Sunday at church. We were not boyfriend and girlfriend, and nothing ever changed. It was driving me crazy.

During that season, God told me to serve her. I remember asking why I would serve a woman who did not want me in her life. My whole life, I had followed God professionally and had been blessed in that obedience. This was the moment I realized it was time to apply that same obedience personally.

I did not even know how to serve her. I started washing her car and making her meal preps. To this day, I do not fully understand why God asked me to do that. What I do know is this. It was never about me.

At some point, we found our way back to each other and she became my girlfriend again. Even then, nothing really changed. Eventually, I made the decision to step away. Soon after, we started talking again, and she shared that she felt like she kept letting me down. Even though we were not really boyfriend and girlfriend, she ended things again. The whole situation was confusing, painful, and honestly exhausting.

When we release our plans and fully submit to His, we stop insisting on what we want God to do and begin participating in what He is already doing, and in that surrender, we have become mentally fit, healed, and free to grow with personal responsibility.

Questions to Consider

1. What wounds or patterns have I avoided addressing?
2. How has avoidance shown up in my relationships?
3. What responsibility do I need to take for my role in past relational pain?
4. Who could help support my healing and growth?
5. What boundaries do I need to strengthen in order to protect my healing and support healthier relationships going forward?

Chapter 12

How You Present Yourself Matters

Pillar Five: Appearance Fitness

1 Samuel 16:7 (NLT)
"But the Lord said to Samuel, 'Don't judge by his appearance or height, for I have rejected him. The Lord doesn't see things the way you see them. People judge by outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart.'"

Wisdom: Your appearance doesn't determine your worth, but it does communicate your mindset.

How you present yourself speaks long before you ever say a word. Your appearance communicates discipline, confidence, self-respect, and the standards you hold for your life. While it does not define your value, it does reflect how intentionally you show up in the world and in relationships.

Presentation is not vanity. When it flows from self-respect rather than insecurity, it becomes stewardship. It reflects care, responsibility, and awareness, not a pursuit of approval.

Scripture gives us a clear picture of this balance.

Proverbs 31:25 (NLT)
"She is clothed with strength and dignity, and she laughs without fear of the future."

This verse is not about fashion. It is about how a person carries themselves. Strength and dignity are visible. Confidence rooted in character shows. True presentation begins internally, but it is expressed externally.

Appearance is not the most important thing, but it is not irrelevant either. It is part of how you carry yourself into the world and into a relationship. When outward presentation aligns with inner character, it creates consistency and trust.

Effort communicates value.

When you show up with care, clean grooming, a fresh scent, coordinated clothing, and intentional style, you communicate confidence, self-respect, maturity, and presence. These signals are not about impressing others. They are about honoring the moment and the people you encounter.

Presence matters.

Presence is the energy you bring into a room. Your posture, tone, eye contact, and overall presentation influence how safe, confident, and approachable you appear. Presence often determines whether someone feels at ease around you or guarded.

Scripture reminds us:

1 Corinthians 16:14 (NLT)
“And do everything with love.”

Everything includes how you show up.

Style does not require money. It requires intention. Whether your wardrobe is simple or detailed, how you wear it often communicates more than what you wear. Intentionality reflects identity and self-awareness.

Grooming is a form of self-care.
Clean nails
Groomed facial hair
Styled hair (or clean-shaven with intention)
Fresh breath
A consistent, appropriate scent

These details may seem small, but they shape first impressions and daily confidence. They also influence how you feel about yourself before anyone else says a word.

Confidence is built through preparation.

When you feel put together, you walk differently. You speak differently. You carry yourself with calm assurance. This is not arrogance. It is emotional steadiness rooted in readiness.

Complacency weakens attraction.

Many people put in effort early in dating, then relax once a relationship feels secure. Over time, this communicates laziness, entitlement, or stagnation. Long-term attraction is sustained by effort, not assumption.

Appearance also influences motivation.

When you show up careless, your mindset often follows. When you show up intentional, discipline and focus tend to follow as well. Sometimes neglect in appearance reflects discouragement or drift in other areas of life. Not always, but often enough to pay attention.

Your appearance will change with age. That is natural.
Your commitment to showing up well should remain.

How you present yourself matters because it reflects who you are becoming.

Personal Reflection

Years ago, a woman once told me that if you work with a good canvas, most pictures will look good. What she meant, I believe, is that when you take care of yourself, what you wear matters less because the foundation is already strong. I understood what she was saying, and to an extent, I agree. The canvas matters. But so does what you choose to put on it.

How you dress still communicates something. But it communicates far more clearly when it rests on a body and a life that are cared for. Appearance is not about labels or trends. It is about stewardship, preparation, and respect for yourself and others.

For me, that stewardship shows up in simple, consistent ways. Clean nails. Groomed appearance. In my case, a perfectly bald head. I take care of details that most people overlook. I have my ears and nose hair waxed monthly. I don't leave the house without being clean, shaved, and presentable. These are not acts of vanity. They are habits of discipline.

I also believe body odor is not acceptable. That may sound blunt, but it is honest. If you think it is fine to show up somewhere without deodorant, reconsider. If you think you might not need a shower, take the shower. These small choices affect how others experience you, whether you realize it or not.

I wear the best deodorant I have ever found. Unfortunately, I cannot give you the brand. If you buy my book, I might let you in on that secret. But humor aside, the point is simple. Showing up well is part of honoring the opportunities God places in front of you.

We often pray for blessings while being unprepared to receive them. Stewardship is preparation. It is choosing to show up ready, clean, confident, and intentional. God does not require perfection, but He does honor readiness.

The canvas matters. The care matters. And how you show up reflects whether you are prepared for the blessings you are asking God to bring into your life.

Questions to Consider

1. What does my appearance currently communicate about my mindset?
2. How does my level of effort affect my confidence and presence?
3. Where have I allowed complacency to replace intentionality?
4. How do I balance self-respect with humility?
5. What small changes could improve how I show up daily?

-

Chapter 13

Living a Lifestyle of Presentation

Pillar Five: Appearance Fitness

1 Corinthians 14:40 (NLT)
"Be sure that everything is done properly and in order."

Wisdom: Your environment is a mirror of your internal world.

Presentation is more than clothing. It is a lifestyle. The way you maintain your home, your car, your routines, and your personal space communicates your mindset just as clearly as your outward appearance. These environments quietly reveal discipline, intentionality, and self-respect.

How you live shapes how you think, how you feel, and how you show up in relationships.

Your home should feel like peace.

It does not need to be expensive, luxurious, or magazine-worthy. It should be clean, organized, intentional, and cared for. A peaceful home creates emotional safety. It invites rest, clarity, and connection.

Clutter creates stress.
Disorder creates distraction.
Chaos breeds anxiety.

A peaceful home supports peaceful communication and reduces unnecessary tension in a relationship.

Scripture reflects this truth.

Proverbs 17:1 (NLT)
“Better a dry crust eaten in peace than a house filled with feasting and conflict.”

Peace is found in order, not extravagance. A simple space filled with care will always feel better than a beautiful space filled with chaos.

Your car reflects habits as well.

Your vehicle is often an extension of your daily life. A clean car communicates consistency, order, and personal responsibility. A neglected car often reflects neglected routines. These details may seem small, but habits leave clues.

Your digital presence also matters.

What you post online reveals maturity, values, insecurities, priorities, and emotional health. A wise person understands the difference between transparency and exposure. Not every emotion needs an audience. Not every thought belongs online.

Scripture offers wisdom here.

Proverbs 29:11 (NLT)
“Fools vent their anger, but the wise quietly hold it back.”

Discernment protects dignity. What you choose not to share often communicates wisdom more clearly than what you do share.

Presentation also shows up in tone and attitude.

How you speak to waiters, cashiers, coworkers, strangers, and family reveals character more than appearance ever could. People remember kindness. They remember respect. They sense energy before they process words.

Kindness creates presence.
Respect builds trust.
Consistency communicates maturity.

Authenticity combined with excellence creates presence.

A lifestyle of presentation is not about pretending or performing. It is about alignment. Who you are in private should match who you are in public. Integrity is consistency across environments.

Respect is communicated through cleanliness, grooming, organized spaces, punctuality, and follow-through. These small signals tell a story about who you are and how you treat what matters to you.

Your environment shapes your mind.

A clean space promotes clarity.
A structured routine promotes stability.
A peaceful home promotes calm communication.

What surrounds you eventually becomes part of you.

You are not only preparing yourself. You are preparing a life someone else may step into. When someone enters your world, your home, your car, your habits, they should feel peace, order, and stability.
Your lifestyle sets the tone for the relationship you will build.

Personal Reflection

How you live reflects the level of peace in your life. For me, peace shows up in simple, daily habits. I make my bed every single day. I do not leave dishes sitting around the house. Toilet lids are closed and bathrooms are clean. The sink is not full of dishes. I may get clutter on the counter from time to time, but I clean it. My house is not a museum, but it does reflect where I am in life.

God has blessed me with something nice, and I believe stewardship requires personal responsibility. Order helps protect peace, but order alone does not create it. True peace only comes from a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. When that foundation is in place, discipline and intention help guard the peace God provides rather than trying to manufacture it.

Keeping chaos out of my life has required growth and awareness. I have learned lessons along the way. There was a time when I took better care of other people's cars than my own. When I was with a woman who meant the world to me, I made sure her car looked perfect while neglecting my own. That experience taught me something. My truck is not a museum either, but today it stays clear of clutter because it reflects where I am now.

Presentation also includes how we handle our emotions publicly. I believe negative emotions do not belong online. They belong with God. Venting to hundreds or thousands of people about the chaos in your life often invites more chaos into it. Wisdom calls us to restraint. If something needs to be expressed, it should be done with kindness and clarity, even when someone else is testing you.

Who you are in private should be who you are in public. Authenticity matters, but peace matters more. Being kind costs nothing. Choosing order, restraint, and consistency creates a life that reflects maturity, stability, and readiness.

My prayer is that you see presentation not as pressure, but as protection. When your relationship with Christ is the foundation, how you live becomes a reflection of His peace. A life marked by order and intention becomes a place where others can safely step in and experience that peace as well.

Questions to Consider

1. How does my environment affect my peace and clarity?
2. What do my home, car, or digital presence communicate about my habits?
3. Where does disorder create unnecessary stress in my life?
4. How does consistency reflect respect for myself and others?
5. What part of my lifestyle could better reflect order and intention?

Chapter 14

Understanding Intimacy Before Marriage

Pillar Six: Intimacy Fitness

Proverbs 4:23 (NLT)
"Guard your heart above all else, for it determines the course of your life."

Wisdom: Intimacy is not proven by closeness. It is proven by how well it is protected.

Intimacy is far deeper than physical touch. It is emotional, spiritual, and relational closeness built through honesty, vulnerability, trust, and respect. Many people confuse sex with intimacy, but sex does not create intimacy. It only deepens what already exists.

When emotional safety, alignment, and commitment are present, physical intimacy strengthens connection. When they are absent, physical closeness often creates confusion, insecurity, and attachment without foundation.

Scripture reminds us what love actually looks like.

1 Corinthians 13:4–5 (NLT)
"Love is patient and kind. Love is not jealous or boastful or proud or rude. It does not demand its own way. It is not irritable, and it keeps no record of being wronged."

Healthy intimacy requires patience, not pressure. True intimacy grows where safety exists. Pressure produces compliance. Safety produces connection.

True intimacy begins with emotional safety.

Emotional safety allows a person to be fully seen. Not the polished version meant to impress, and not the guarded version meant to protect, but the real person underneath. When someone feels emotionally safe, vulnerability becomes natural instead of forced.

Physical connection without emotional safety creates attachment without clarity. It can bond people quickly while bypassing discernment, leading to confusion about the future of the relationship.

Sex alone does not create lasting intimacy.

Physical chemistry is not spiritual alignment.
Attraction is not emotional maturity.
Connection is not covenant.

Without clarity and commitment, sex forms deep bonds that the relationship may not be strong enough to hold. What feels like love is often attachment driven by chemistry rather than alignment.

Scripture warns us about premature bonding.

Song of Songs 8:4 (NLT)
"Promise me, O women of Jerusalem, do not awaken love until the time is right."

Desire is powerful. Timing determines whether desire becomes a blessing or a burden.

Boundaries protect what love is trying to build.

Boundaries are not about restriction. They are about wisdom. Boundaries create clarity, and clarity creates peace. When boundaries are honored, trust grows. When boundaries are ignored, fear, insecurity, and regret often follow.

Healthy boundaries communicate value. They say the relationship matters enough to protect, that God's design is respected, and that self-respect is present.

Self-control is a form of love.

Self-control says this relationship matters enough to be protected. It demonstrates maturity and readiness rather than denial.

Scripture identifies self-control as evidence of spiritual growth.

Galatians 5:22–23 (NLT)
"But the Holy Spirit produces this kind of fruit in our lives: love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. There is no law against these things!"

Self-control is not weakness. It is strength under discipline.

Soul ties influence attachment.

Sexual and emotional bonding can cloud judgment, prolong unhealthy situations, and make it difficult to walk away from relationships that are misaligned with your future. When deep connection forms without commitment, expectations grow without structure.

Understanding intimacy also requires understanding pace.

Going slow does not mean lacking passion. It means protecting potential. Rushing intimacy often accelerates attachment before clarity is established. Pacing intimacy allows alignment to develop naturally.

Respect drives intimacy.

Respect for boundaries, timing, emotional comfort, spiritual convictions, and personal growth creates safety. When intimacy is rooted in respect, closeness becomes secure rather than pressured.

God-centered intimacy grows naturally when it is patient, intentional, honest, and spiritually aligned. True intimacy is not measured by speed. It is measured by safety, clarity, and purpose.

Relationships are strongest when intimacy is approached with wisdom instead of impulse.

Personal Reflection

There was a time when I misunderstood intimacy. I believed closeness was proven by access rather than protection. I confused chemistry with connection and passion with alignment. What I learned through experience is that intimacy without clarity often creates confusion instead of security.

I have seen how quickly attachment can form when boundaries are ignored, and how difficult it becomes to think clearly once emotions and physical connection are deeply involved. What feels powerful in the moment can later feel painful when the foundation is not strong enough to support it.

Understanding intimacy required me to slow down and examine what I was truly seeking. Was I pursuing connection or comfort? Was I honoring God's design or reacting to desire? Wisdom taught me that patience is not delay. It is protection.

True intimacy grows where safety exists. It flourishes when respect leads the way. When intimacy is guarded with intention and surrendered to God, it becomes a source of peace rather than confusion.

My prayer is that you learn to protect intimacy before marriage, not suppress it. What you guard today becomes what you can trust tomorrow.

Questions to Consider

1. How do I personally define intimacy?
2. Where have I confused physical closeness with emotional or spiritual connection?
3. What boundaries help me protect what I value most?
4. How does patience strengthen trust and clarity?
5. What would it look like to approach intimacy with wisdom instead of impulse?

-

Chapter 15

Building Healthy Sexual Expectations for Marriage

Pillar Six: Intimacy Fitness

Hebrews 13:4 (NLT)
"Give honor to marriage and remain faithful to one another in marriage. God will surely judge people who are immoral and those who commit adultery."

Wisdom: Great intimacy is built through communication, not assumption.

Sex is a meaningful and sacred part of marriage, but it is not the foundation of marriage. Healthy sexual intimacy grows from trust, emotional safety, communication, and spiritual alignment. When intimacy is placed on the wrong foundation, it becomes fragile rather than strengthening.

Many people enter marriage carrying silent expectations about sex. These expectations are shaped by past experiences, misunderstandings, insecurity, shame, cultural messages, and avoidance. When expectations remain unspoken, they quietly influence behavior and reactions.

Unspoken expectations create confusion, disappointment, and unnecessary conflict.

Sex cannot fix emotional gaps.
Sex cannot heal insecurity.
Sex cannot erase unresolved wounds.
Sex cannot create communication.
Sex cannot solve conflict.

When intimacy is used to compensate for deeper issues, pressure replaces connection.

Scripture reminds us that intimacy flows from unity.

Matthew 19:5 (NLT)
“This explains why a man leaves his father and mother and is joined to his wife, and the two are united into one.”

Unity is spiritual first, emotional second, and physical last. When the order is respected, intimacy strengthens marriage rather than strains it.

Healthy sexual intimacy requires honest conversation.

Couples must be willing to talk openly about comfort levels, expectations, fears, insecurities, boundaries, triggers, pacing, and when appropriate, sexual history. These conversations are not meant to compare or judge. They are meant to understand.

Silence creates assumptions.
Assumptions create distance.
Honesty creates unity.

Discussing past experiences is about context, not comparison. It helps explain emotional reactions, sensitivities, and boundaries. These conversations must be handled with gentleness, discretion, and maturity, honoring both people involved.

Sex within marriage is a journey, not a performance.

Intimacy evolves through seasons of life. Stress, health, emotional connection, responsibilities, age, and life circumstances all influence desire and connection. Expecting perfection creates pressure. Choosing growth creates intimacy.

Trust fuels desire.

When a partner feels heard, respected, safe, and valued, intimacy becomes natural rather than forced. Pressure shuts desire down. Criticism creates distance. Grace invites closeness.

Scripture aligns with this truth.

1 Corinthians 13:5 (NLT)
"It does not demand its own way. It is not irritable, and it keeps no record of being wronged."

A relationship grounded in grace creates freedom instead of fear.

Patience is essential.

Two people learning one another takes time. Understanding rhythms, preferences, emotional needs, and comfort levels builds a foundation that lasts. Rushing intimacy often weakens trust. Patience strengthens connection.

Intimacy should never be used as manipulation.

Using sex to punish, reward, withhold, or control undermines trust and damages emotional safety. Likewise, demanding intimacy creates fear rather than closeness. Healthy couples communicate. They do not negotiate affection.
Keeping intimacy alive requires intention.

Connection outside the bedroom fuels intimacy within it. Compliments, quality time, emotional openness, affection, romance, laughter, and small acts of kindness create warmth and anticipation. Intimacy grows when people feel desired, not pressured.

In marriage, sex becomes an expression of unity, not validation. It is sacred, bonding, renewing, and strengthening. A strong marriage produces strong intimacy, not the other way around.

Personal Reflection

There was a time when I underestimated how much communication mattered in intimacy. I assumed connection would come naturally without conversation. What I learned instead is that assumptions create distance, while honesty builds closeness.

I have seen how unspoken expectations quietly shape frustration and misunderstanding. When intimacy is approached without communication, people often feel unseen, unheard, or pressured. But when conversations are handled with humility, patience, and grace, intimacy becomes safer and more fulfilling.

Healthy intimacy taught me that love is not about demand. It is about mutual care, respect, and understanding. Desire grows where trust exists. Safety invites closeness. And patience protects what God is building.

My prayer is that you approach sexual intimacy with wisdom rather than pressure, with communication rather than assumption, and with grace rather than fear. When intimacy is rooted in trust and surrendered to God's design, it becomes a source of connection, peace, and renewal within marriage.

Questions to Consider

1. What expectations about sex have I formed, consciously or unconsciously?
2. How comfortable am I having honest conversations about intimacy?
3. How do grace and patience shape healthy sexual connection?
4. What role does communication play in emotional and physical closeness?
5. How can I cultivate intimacy rooted in trust rather than pressure?

Chapter 16

Living the Pillars

Wisdom: Preparation only matters if it becomes practice.

Up to this point, this book has focused on understanding what healthy love requires. Awareness is essential, but awareness alone does not create change. Growth only happens when insight turns into action and intention turns into consistency.

The six pillars were never meant to be ideas you admire. They were meant to be disciplines you live.

Many people know what a healthy relationship looks like, yet never experience one because their lives do not reflect what they say they want. They read, agree, nod, and move on. Nothing changes because nothing is practiced.

Living the pillars means your daily decisions align with your long-term desires. Not occasionally. Not when it feels convenient. Not when motivation is high. But consistently.

The Difference Between Knowing and Living

Knowing the pillars creates understanding.
Living the pillars creates transformation.

A person can say spiritual alignment matters and still neglect prayer, community, and obedience.
A person can value financial stability and still avoid budgeting, discipline, or honesty.
A person can believe emotional maturity is important and still react, shut down, or blame.

Living the pillars means your habits support your beliefs.

Jesus addressed this gap clearly.

Matthew 7:24 (NLT)
“Anyone who listens to my teaching and follows it is wise, like a person who builds a house on solid rock.”

Listening creates awareness. Following creates stability. A strong foundation is built through obedience, not intention.

Pillars Are Built Through Repetition

The pillars are not strengthened through bursts of effort. They are strengthened through repetition.

Daily prayer matters more than occasional emotional breakthroughs.
Consistent budgeting matters more than short-term financial wins.
Regular movement matters more than motivation.
Emotional regulation practiced daily matters more than knowing the right language.

What you repeat eventually becomes who you are.

Living the pillars means regularly asking yourself honest public/books/relationship-fitness.pdfquestions. Does my schedule reflect my values. Do my habits support the future I am praying for. Am I disciplined in private or only impressive in public. Am I growing or just talking about growth.

Living the Pillars Requires Ownership
No one else can live these pillars for you.

Not your pastor.
Not your therapist.
Not your future spouse.

A relationship does not create discipline. It reveals whether discipline already exists.

If you are inconsistent now, inconsistency will follow you into partnership.
If you avoid responsibility now, avoidance will surface in marriage.
If you lack boundaries now, intimacy will be harder to protect later.

Living the pillars means taking ownership of your growth without waiting for someone else to motivate you.

Alignment Happens When the Pillars Work Together

The pillars were never meant to function independently. They reinforce one another.

Spiritual fitness strengthens emotional regulation.
Financial discipline reduces relational stress.
Physical health improves patience and confidence.
Mental fitness creates emotional safety.
Appearance fitness reflects self-respect.
Intimacy fitness protects trust and connection.

When one pillar is neglected, pressure increases on the others.
When several are ignored, the entire structure weakens.

Living the pillars does not create perfection. It creates stability.

Living the Pillars Changes How You Choose

When you live the pillars, your decisions change.

You stop choosing from loneliness.
You stop tolerating red flags.
You stop confusing chemistry with compatibility.
You stop negotiating your values for attention.
You begin choosing from clarity instead of fear.

You no longer rush connection.
You no longer settle.
You no longer seek completion from another person.

Living the pillars allows you to choose from wholeness.

Living the Pillars Is a Daily Decision

There is no finish line to personal growth. There is only consistency.

Some days will feel strong.
Some days will feel slow.
Some days will feel uncomfortable.

Growth is not proven by emotion. It is proven by obedience to your values.

Living the pillars means doing the work now so the relationship later feels peaceful instead of chaotic.

Preparation becomes power when it becomes practice.

Personal Reflection

Living the pillars forced me to confront a hard truth. There was a gap between what I said I valued and how I lived. Awareness alone was never enough. I could understand the right things, believe the right things, and still avoid the discipline required to live them out. Real change did not begin until consistency replaced intention and ownership replaced excuses.

I learned that growth does not happen publicly first. It happens in private. The more disciplined I became when no one was watching, the more clarity I gained in my relationships. Patterns that once felt confusing became obvious. Choices that once felt emotional became clearer. I stopped reacting from impulse and started responding from alignment.

Living the pillars also showed me that growth is not about trying harder. It is about living honestly. When my habits began to reflect my values, peace followed. Relationships felt less chaotic. Decisions felt less rushed. I no longer needed validation to feel grounded because my life was becoming congruent with what I believed.

This process humbled me. It exposed areas where I talked about growth without practicing it and where I wanted results without discipline. But it also strengthened me. Alignment replaced effort. Clarity replaced confusion. And responsibility replaced blame.

Living the pillars did not make me perfect. It made me consistent. And consistency changed everything.

Questions to Consider

1. Which pillar am I strongest in right now, and why?
2. Which pillar do I most often neglect?
3. What daily habit would strengthen my weakest pillar?
4. Where have I been informed but not transformed?
5. What would change if I treated growth as a lifestyle instead of a phase?

-

Chapter 17

Creating Your Personal Growth Pillars

Wisdom: What you do intentionally becomes who you are consistently.

Every strong relationship rests on preparation. But preparation without structure fades. Growth without clarity becomes emotional motivation instead of lasting transformation. This is why personal pillars matter.

Pillars turn intention into action. They transform vague desires into lived discipline. Without pillars, growth is accidental. With pillars, growth becomes intentional.

The six pillars in this book were never meant to be copied blindly. They were meant to guide you toward building your own. Your season, responsibilities, weaknesses, and calling are unique. Your pillars should reflect that reality.

What a Pillar Is and Is Not

A pillar is not a goal.
A pillar is not a resolution.
A pillar is not a feeling.

A pillar is a framework that supports the person you are becoming.

Pillars anchor decisions, expose inconsistency, align belief with behavior, remove excuses, and build readiness before opportunity arrives.

If your life does not change, your pillars are not real.

Why Personal Pillars Matter in Relationships

Relationships rarely collapse suddenly. They erode when discipline fades, communication weakens, integrity drifts, and emotional health declines.

You cannot maintain what you do not structure.
You cannot sustain what you do not practice.
You cannot build with someone else what you have not built within yourself.

Strong relationships are formed by individuals who already live intentionally.

The Six Pillar Framework

Use these categories as a guide, not a script.

Spiritual fitness
Financial fitness
Physical fitness
Mental fitness
Appearance fitness
Intimacy fitness

Each pillar should answer three questions. What am I practicing consistently now. What am I intentionally growing. What do I plan to strengthen next.

If a pillar has no regular action, it is not a pillar yet.

How to Build Your Personal Growth Pillars

Start with honesty, not aspiration. Write what you are willing to practice now, not what sounds impressive.

Limit each pillar to what is sustainable. Discipline grows best when it is realistic.

Tie each pillar to identity. You are not trying to do more. You are becoming someone different.

Your pillars should reinforce stability, discipline, emotional safety, spiritual grounding, and consistency.

Living Your Pillars

Your pillars should be visible in your life, not hidden in a notebook.

They should influence how you schedule your time, how you respond under pressure, what you tolerate, and what you walk away from.

If someone observed your life for a week, they should be able to identify your pillars without reading them.

Review and Adjust

Pillars evolve with seasons. They are meant to be reviewed, not abandoned. Strengthen what is working. Let go of what no longer serves your growth. Add only what you are ready to sustain with consistency and integrity.

Growth is not about intensity.
It is about consistency.

Personal Reflection

Building personal pillars required honesty about where I was, not where I wanted to appear. Structure brought clarity, and clarity created momentum. Over time, discipline stopped feeling restrictive and began to feel grounding. What once felt like effort became stability.

Pillars gave direction to my growth and steadiness to my decisions. They removed confusion and replaced it with alignment. Instead of chasing change, I began living it. Growth became less about striving and more about consistency, and that consistency reshaped how I showed up in every area of my life.

Questions to Consider

1. Which pillar currently feels weakest, and why?
2. Where have I confused desire with discipline?
3. What habit, practiced consistently, would change my readiness most?
4. How do my current routines reflect the partner I want to be?
5. What version of me would a future relationship inherit if nothing changed?

Chapter 18

Choosing Who Walks Beside You

Wisdom: Growth determines who you recognize, not just who you attract.

By this point, the focus shifts. You are no longer asking how to grow. You are asking who belongs beside the person you are becoming.

Growth without discernment still leads to pain.

Growth Changes Your Vision

As you grow, your awareness sharpens.

You begin noticing inconsistency, emotional instability, misaligned values, lack of discipline, and avoidance disguised as charm.

What once felt exciting may now feel unsettling. What once felt familiar may now feel unsafe.

This is not arrogance. It is clarity.

Proverbs 4:25–26 (NLT)

“Look straight ahead, and fix your eyes on what lies before you. Mark out a straight path for your feet.”

Clarity sharpens discernment.

Compatibility Is Built on Alignment, Not Chemistry

Chemistry creates connection.
Alignment creates longevity.

Alignment includes shared values, similar direction, emotional maturity, spiritual grounding, and mutual discipline.

Amos 3:3 (NLT)
“Can two people walk together without agreeing on the direction?”

Attraction may start the walk. Agreement determines whether it lasts.

Standards Are Not Demands

Standards are boundaries that protect your future. They are not expectations placed on others. They are requirements for access to your life.

Standards are not about perfection. They are about fit.

Proverbs 13:20 (NLT)
“Walk with the wise and become wise.”

Who you walk with shapes who you become.

Red Flags Are Information

Red flags do not mean someone is bad. They mean someone is not aligned.

Ignoring red flags does not make you loving. It makes you unprepared.
Red flags guide decisions before emotions take over.

Choosing From Wholeness

Loneliness creates urgency.
Wholeness creates patience.

When you are grounded, you do not rush connection, tolerate confusion, or negotiate values for attention.

Proverbs 19:2 (NLT)
“Enthusiasm without knowledge is no good; haste makes mistakes.”

Waiting well is disciplined.

The Right Person Supports Your Growth

The right person respects your discipline, supports your values, encourages your growth, and brings peace rather than chaos.

Healthy relationships feel steady, not dramatic.

Choosing Well Is Stewardship

Your heart matters. Your future matters.

Proverbs 4:23 (NLT)
“Guard your heart above all else.”

Choose slowly. Choose prayerfully. Choose from clarity, not fear.

Personal Reflection

Growth reshaped how I viewed connection. What once felt exciting no longer felt safe. Discernment replaced urgency. Choosing well became less about attraction and more about alignment. Growth clarified not only who I wanted, but who I was becoming.

Questions to Consider

1. What has my growth changed about what I notice in relationships?
2. What red flags have I ignored in the past, and why?
3. Do my standards protect my future or feed my ego?
4. Where am I tempted to choose from loneliness instead of clarity?
5. What qualities must someone have to walk beside the person I am becoming?

Conclusion

Becoming Ready for the Love You Want

Matthew 7:24 (NLT)
"Anyone who listens to my teaching and follows it is wise, like a person who builds a house on solid rock."

Wisdom: Healthy love is not found. It is built through preparation, growth, and maturity.

Healthy relationships are not built by accident. They are the result of intentional growth, emotional maturity, spiritual grounding, discipline, and wisdom. Love alone cannot sustain a marriage. Attraction alone cannot build a future. Chemistry can spark connection, but character is what carries it.

Most people pray for a healthy relationship while living with habits that undermine it.

They want peace but tolerate chaos.
They want honesty but avoid truth.
They want commitment but resist discipline.

Preparation is how you close the gap.
Preparation protects your future.

When you develop strength, clarity, and emotional maturity before entering a relationship, you protect both hearts, yours and your future spouse's. You prevent unnecessary hurt, conflict, and confusion. You enter the relationship as an asset, not a liability.

Scripture reinforces this principle of readiness.

Proverbs 23:23 (NLT)
“Get the truth and never sell it; also get wisdom, discipline, and good judgment.”

Wisdom comes before union, not after.

Growth changes what you attract.

When you heal, you stop choosing from wounds.
When you mature, you stop choosing from loneliness.
When you clarify your purpose, you stop choosing from confusion.

You attract differently when you grow.
You choose differently when you heal.
You communicate differently when you are aligned spiritually.

Your past may have shaped you, but it does not have to dictate your future. You are not defined by what happened to you. You are defined by what you decide to build next.

The six pillars are not checkboxes. They are a lifestyle.

Spiritual Fitness brings alignment and purpose.
Financial Fitness builds stability and peace.
Physical Fitness strengthens energy and confidence.
Mental Fitness creates emotional safety.
Appearance Fitness reflects discipline and self-respect.
Intimacy Fitness protects connection and deepens trust.

A healthy relationship requires every pillar working together, supporting a foundation strong enough to withstand life's storms.

You do not need perfection. You need intentional progress.
You do not need to have everything figured out.
You do not need to fix your entire past overnight.
You do not need to master all six pillars before love arrives.

You simply need to be committed to growing consistently, humbly, and honestly.

God never demands perfection. He invites transformation.

Philippians 1:6 (NLT)
"And I am certain that God, who began the good work within you, will continue his work until it is finally finished on the day when Christ Jesus returns."

Growth is a process you do not walk alone.

When you are ready, love becomes clearer.

You will not chase validation.
You will not tolerate confusion.
You will not mistake attention for intention.
You will not build relationships on loneliness or fear.

A healthy relationship will not feel complicated or chaotic. It will feel aligned, steady, and peaceful.

The right person will not complete you.
They will complement who you have become.

Healthy love is not about soulmates. It is built through real effort.

Love becomes stronger through communication, forgiveness, intentionality, consistency, shared purpose, respect, and spiritual unity.

This book was never about finding the perfect partner.
It was about becoming someone capable of sustaining the love you desire.

You are preparing not just for a relationship, but for a legacy.

The work you do today shapes your family's future tomorrow.
Your growth impacts generations.
Your maturity sets a standard.
Your healing breaks cycles.

Healthy love honors God.
Healthy love honors your future spouse.
Healthy love honors your purpose.

You are not waiting for love.
You are becoming ready for it.

About the Author

Thomas Marks is a United States Air Force veteran, former elite sales leader, and respected Texas Realtor with decades of experience helping people build their futures with clarity and confidence. His career spans military service, corporate leadership, entrepreneurship, consulting, and real estate investment. In every field, Thomas has built a reputation for discipline, integrity, and results.

After serving his country, Thomas began a career in telecommunications, where his performance quickly set him apart. He achieved one of the highest honors in the industry by becoming the number one Senior Account Manager in the world at AT&T. This recognition came through exceptional execution, strategic insight, and a standard of excellence that defined his career.

Over the course of eight years, Thomas built and led three separate sales teams. He developed high performing groups from the ground up and created environments rooted in accountability, support, and intentional development. His ability to grow people, not just business, became one of his strongest leadership qualities.

Thomas later brought his leadership and business experience into commercial and residential real estate in Texas. Today, he guides families, investors, and business owners through decisions that shape their financial futures. His work includes land development, investment strategy, business acquisitions, and helping clients build stability through real estate.

Beyond his professional life, Thomas is committed to service and spiritual growth. He serves at Hope City Church on the Safety Team, participates in veteran outreach, mentors youth, and leads FaithFit, a group focused on strengthening men spiritually, physically, and mentally.

Through all of these experiences, Thomas discovered a truth that shaped the purpose of this book. Most relationships do not fail because two people stopped loving each other. They fail because people enter them unprepared for what love requires.

This book was written from that conviction. Healthy love is not something you find. It is something you build with strength, maturity, honesty, and spiritual alignment.

Thomas lives and serves in Katy, Texas, where he is dedicated to helping people create lives and relationships built on purpose, clarity, and faith.